“ My heart aches, but Heaven is one star brighter.

It's been almost a week now since I was awakened by the sad news. I find it too hard to believe that she'd left us. My poor daughter, who was lying next to me cried and cried with me and my husband as she was eagerly expecting to see her Ninang Arlyn in a few weeks to greet her personally on her birthday. But she's gone.. succumb to cancer. It took 13 months to steal her away from everyone who loves her.

The day after I found out, I started to write about her, but found myself at such a loss. My heart physically hurts. For days I have been struggling to find the right words to describe my dearest friend- to tell people about her, and to explain why this loss I must say is so tragic. I can't seem to find the perfect words. Any death of someone so young is a tremendous loss, I know.

Arlyn was special. very special. Dare I say extraordinary.

How do I describe the most selfless person I know? How do I explain the multitude of ways she made me feel like I'm not just a friend, but more like a true-blooded sister, especially when my husband and I lived in New Jersey and was then starting our small family. She's always been just a phone call away.

Not to mention the very special connection and affection we had with our friends from college. Just so many wonderful and fun memories! The burst of laughter when she cracks a joke! That even if we have not seen or talk to each other for so long, we needed no words to explain anything at all and that kind of relationship is still there, unchanged by distance nor time. She was the life of the party!

How do I begin to recount the numerous people she helped, the people she inspired, the lives she touched? To call her a giver does not do her justice. I believe giving was simply part of her nature, a portion of her soul.

Arlyn was a fun-loving person, a true friend, a loving sister, a great mom.. An undaunted warrior.. A beautiful soul. Gone too soon.

I have learned a lot from her especially during her battle with cancer. I admire her courage and benevolence. Even faced with such an extreme challenge, her faith and will to fight never waived. She was fighting for her life... fighting for her family. She has given so much of herself for her loved ones and there's certainly a lot more in that beautiful heart of her that makes us cry out she deserves more to life than this. But the battle has come to an end and she departs- now free from all the hurts and pains.

My heart breaks painfully that no matter how much I hope, wish and pray, I'm not gonna see her anymore. I can only hold on to the wonderful memories she left us with, which will stay in my heart forever. Truly, certain things in life are so difficult to fathom, but I know that God's plan is better than ours. I'm quite sure of one thing. The world has lost one extraordinary person, and Heaven has gained an extraordinary angel.

Arlyn, you were a treasure, my dear friend. Thank you for the precious life you've shared, thank you for the friendship we will cherish forever. You will never be forgotten. I love you, my friend. We will always miss you! Until then.. In peace you shall rest.
